Teaching Reading Lower Key Stage 2 Key principals

Reading has to be high priority in every class.

- Classrooms must reflect this through:
  - Having a reading display which is engaging, well displayed and organised.
  - Including newspapers, magazines and a range of reading materials.
  - Levelling books in book area.
  - Making space for bookbags to be stored
  - Displaying racing to read records and rewards.

Home reading must continue to be high priority. It should be a source of pride for each child to talk about a book they have loved reading and time each week must be given for this, with every child sharing their 'best read' at some point in the term. Teacher/TAs need to keep a record of which books and how many have been read by each child and follow up when insufficient reading is being done. The expectation should be that a child will read at least 3 hours a week. Class certificates for 'my 25th hour' etc. will motivate LKS2 children. These children could be featured on the website or in the newsletter. The teacher needs to promote this by regularly talking about favourite books, favourite authors etc and by highlighting reviews of new books. The learning platform and /or the new library system is an opportunity for LKS2 to publish a review of a book they have read.

Children should be choosing a home reading book based on teacher assessment – each band representing a NC level. This should be monitored regularly and when children are making progress, the book band should reflect this i.e. when children move on a sublevel, they go up a stage.

Parents should be encouraged to hear their child read daily and sign the reading record. TAs should be responsible for checking these daily and keep a record of who is or isn't reading regularly. The CT is responsible for following this up with the child and their parents.

On a Friday, those children that have read every night will earn a Racing to Read raffle ticket.

The Reading Lesson

Some reading lessons will be whole class and some will be with a focus group. Using the long read/short write followed by long write/short read model detailed in the non-negotiables, there should  $\Rightarrow$  be as much time allocated to teaching reading as to teaching writing. This time must be well used.

Whole class reading

- For whole class reading lessons, every child must have a copy of the text. Sharing reading texts is uncomfortable, therefore for a whole class, a set of the particular text is needed or sections of the text to be used need to be copied and distributed.
- The text will be from the overall genre that is currently being studied eg historical fiction and will often link directly to topic learning.

- The reading lesson should start with the teacher reading, modelling the use of expression to engage pupils. Pupils need to be taught that when the teacher indicates to any pupil to take over reading, they should know precisely where to pick up and continue because they are following closely. In this way the teacher and the pupils share the reading aloud of a section of the text. The teacher uses this technique to target particular pupils to check on their use of expression as an indicator for their understanding. As the pupil reads, the teacher can note any relevant points about the child's reading for future reference.
- At LKS2 all children should have vocab and spelling jotters, rainbow writing books and these need to be on the table during all reading (and indeed all literacy) lessons. As the reading continues, children should be taught to jot down any words that they do not know the meaning of, or any words they think would add to the vitality of their writing. The teacher must insist that children copy the word correctly and accept no spelling errors. If a child makes no jottings the teacher may need to check eg 'I see Aiden that you didn't write down the word ...... so you can explain to Alice what that means'
- On the tables there must be dictionaries. Before the end of the lesson children must be given time to look up the words they don't know and write down briefly what they mean. This should not be a lengthy task. However if children do not know how to use a dictionary it will be. Therefore at the beginning of the academic year all LKS2 classes need to build in some lessons to actively teach children how to use a dictionary effectively. With this and with practice, children will become more skilled in finding words.
- A key part of the reading lesson is questioning, the teacher must have prepared the questions that s/he wants the children to answer which targets the particular skills that require development. By practicing comprehension type questions orally, children are provided with a model of how to answer. During this questioning the teacher needs to focus not on getting the right answer but on teaching how to work out the right answer and present the answer succinctly. What sort of question is it? Which part of the text gives clues? How can the answer be explained?
- Oral questions may then be followed by some independent practice of comprehension questions. Comprehension practice as well as oral comprehension is necessary. Some written comprehension practice must be done each week.
- Comprehension homework should be set weekly again, reflecting the key skills taught that week.

☆ ☆ ☆ This will be a reading session tailored to the needs of the groups which will be selected by ability. The text will also be tailored to the needs of this ability. Focus group reading sessions will allow for more time for the teacher to hear each child read aloud to ask questions of each child and to diagnose what each child needs next. The overall format of the session will be the same as for class sessions. Focus Group reading will occur four times each week.

Detailed guided reading records must be kept for these sessions, with comments linked to the Assessment Focus. Not just a tick or 'read well'.

Reading targets

All children should have personal reading targets which are photocopied onto blue card and kept in the guided reading folders/boxes. All children must know the end of year level they are working towards and the step they are currently working on in order to achieve this. These must be reviewed regularly as part of teaching reading.

Children who are struggling with reading

These children require an individualised programme which identifies what it is they can and cannot yet do and addresses this. The TA and the teacher will need to be involved in both planning and delivering sessions for these children. So for example, whilst the TA leads a whole class session, the teacher will teach the two or three children and the following day the opposite. During guided reading, these children also need specifically planned work to address their needs.

☆ ☆ At LKS2 children should be aiming to read more independently and aloud with confidence. However this does not mean they do not need reading lessons. Instead, the focus of reading lessons should ☆ move, for the majority of pupils, from teaching decoding and fluency, to higher order reading skills such 🖈 ☆ as inference and prediction. Questioning will be carefully planned for and address all areas of reading ☆ curriculum. ☆

For those children who still are struggling with the basics of reading a separate individualised programme must be used and could include precision learning of key sounds.
